

You may be in luck. Once in a blue moon I have a show prospect that I have decided to place in a pet home. Currently I have a 6 mo old tri colored female pup I saved back from my last litter to show. Unfortunately, she isn't going to make the cut. It happens. I only just recently made this decision after a couple months of denial, and had her honestly evaluated by another breeder who agrees she's nice enough to show, but I probably wouldn't win much. I've had her health tested (DM and vWD Clear) and was all prepared to keep her as my next show and breeding dog, but she is just not maturing as I had hoped. There's nothing wrong with her, she just isn't the quite up to the caliber I need. Showing corgis is extremely competitive, and I have to be realistic, I can't keep them all. She is really sweet, really gorgeous, socialized well and adores kids and cats. We have horses too as we live on a small ranch. She spends most of her time running and playing with her auntie and great grandpa Parker, when she's not throwing toys all over the living room and demanding I play with her. She was one of four in her litter, two of which went to stellar pet homes and one other to a show home where he is starting his show career. Here is her litter

<http://www.rockylranch.com/puppies2017/puppies2017-dec.html>

I invite you to read my website where you can learn about my breeding program, health testing and about some of my dogs. I am all about constantly bettering my breeding program through show results, performance events and health testing. I sell all my pet corgis for $2000 on a mandatory spay neuter contract. She is up to date on all her vaccinations and has been microchipped.

This puppy's name is Rigby. I had great hopes for her because she is such a nice pup, but alas, it was not to be. I am really bummed too because I am working hard to eliminate DM from my breeding program and she is Clear. But it also takes conformation and movement and she falls a little short. My program is about "building a better corgi" so I have to breed the best to the best. Folks like you benefit by getting the "pets" who have the health clearances, stellar pedigrees and are really nice dogs even if they don't quite make the cut for show or breeding. I have been very lucky to find really good pet homes for my pups and yours sounds like one of them.

I will need to know more about you, your facilities, work or school schedule and experience with pets. Also if you have any other pets or kids. (This is a good thing.)

Let me know if you are interested. Email: frelop@sbcglobal.net
<mailto:frelop@sbcglobal.net?subject=I'm%20interested%20in%20your%20puppy>

